great. my plan is to finish the brief generally, and then use your materials to ensure i haven't left out anything important. when it comes to the "statement of the facts," however, I may simply crib your excellent narrative space is going to be a real problem

I don't mind duplicating your work. I do not mean to replace your work, but to support you and ensure we can arrive at the finish with all holes plugged.

I imagine you looking for a solution to a particular issue, and finding that solution in our work. Such is my goal.

thanks, it appears we are duplicating work on this. remember, when describing the "facts," we need to focus on the evidence that was put in front of the jury, which is generally found in the RP.

The narrative part is an important device that will give you a map of events and their connections. We have almost finished writing it, but the references into CP and RP are not complete yet. I will forward the completed narrative when done, and send the annotated narrative when that version is finished.

I believe we will have a story much better told than Windermere, which probably seems choppy and confused to a person who does not have first-hand knowledge.

Great, thanks. I have been working on it for the better part of the last two weeks (and have already gone over 50 pages). It is daunting, but interesting. Believe I will be in a position to have a draft within the next week or so.

Here is a more complete version of the Notes on the Windermere brief. If you want help finding any references for any statements here, please ask.
